

Abstract:

The present invention relates to efficient organic light emitting devices (OLEDs), and more specifically to phosphorescent organic materials used in such devices. More specifically, the present invention relates to materials with improved stability and efficiency when incorporated into an OLED.